

My website form is supposed to be taking patient information, checking its authenticity via a review button while utilizing a submit and reset button as well as a validate button- while also checking that information being submitted to certain boxes is valid. I was able to add an external iframe and keep the header attached while scrolling and keep the footer fixed- I referenced the texas board of dental with my external website and it all melded together well. I had a slight issue with java cookies but it came down to some syntax errors that I cleared up- all around i really like the way my project turned out! (I still wasnt able to get the formatting for my homework 3 css to display so its still blocked out but the coding is still there, so that is frustrating)
